Marriage, Migration and Gender: Fogo Patricka 2008-06-15 This is the final volume in the five volume series on Women and Migration in Asia. The articles in this volume bring a gender-sensitive perspective to bear on aspects of marriage and migration in intra- and transnational contexts. In particular, they consider how, given specific rules of marriage and post-marital residence, the institution of marriage may be shaped by women's migration. In some cases, for example, women may be able to use their migration as a strategic device to gain a say in decisions about marriage and residence.

Marriage and New Media: Hesvik Mbecue 2010-04-01 How do parents and children care for each other when they are separated because of migration? The way in which transnational households organize long distance relationships has been transformed by the emergence of new media such as e-mail, instant messaging, social networking sites, webcams and texting. A migrant mother can now call to talk to her left-behind children several times a day, view camera footage of her children, and even hear her children for 10 hours without being charged a fee. Drawing on a long-term ethnographic study of prolonged separation between migrant mothers and their children who remain in the Philippines, this book develops groundbreaking theory for understanding both migrant and non-migrant children's experiences of long distance relationships. It brings together the perspectives of the mothers and children and shows how the very nature of family relationships is changing. New words, understandings of family relationships, and new forms of care are emerging in response to the profound changes in the nature of family relationships together the perspectives of both the mothers and children and shows how the very nature of family relationships is changing. New media, understood as an emerging environment of polymedia, have become integral to the way family relationships are enacted and experienced. The theory of polymedia extends beyond the poignant case study and is developed as a major contribution for understanding the interconnections between digital media and interpersonal relationships.

Wives, Husbands, and Law: Behar and Lawson 2007-08-01 What is the state of intimate romantic relationships and marriage in urban China? Hong Kong, and Taiwan from 1990 to 2000, the number of single women who were between the ages of 30 and 34 increased dramatically. While some speculate that the 30s are when women's careers are established, the book also shows that in China, marriage is often seen as the key to women's personal development and the key to women's happiness. In this book, the authors examine the changing nature of marriage and romantic relationships in China, with an eye on how they shape the experiences of women.

Engendering Forced Migration: Birnie Nancy 2011-06-19 Scholars provide a timely warning (and an optimistic look) beyond the statistics of the experiences of the world's refugees. Without understanding migration, women, girls, and boys are vulnerable.
